

STORIES FROM THE SIDINGS

The Meridian is a train the size of a nation, and it does not stop for anyone.

These are four stories from its margins: a brother and sister carrying a letter no one will take delivery of; a maintenance worker whose junction rattles in the wrong key; a station keeper whose books balance a hundred years too neatly; and a hauler on a platform, learning what the train looks like from the outside.

Four stories of the people the timetable never mentions — told from the sidings, where the mainline can be seen whole.
